PubAffairs launches new website

PubAffairs has today launched a new and improved website for public affairs, policy and government communications practitioners at www.PubAffairs.org

PubAffairs Founder and Director, Phil Murphy said:

“PubAffairs is the largest network of its type in the UK and with over 2000 members is continuing to expand activities and grow the membership level. The vast new website is part of group’s further development and provides a central resource both for those already working in the industry as well as those looking to break into the public affairs and policy sector.”

Key areas in site expansion are the PubAffairsJobs section and the Resource Centre providing listings including political consultancies, training courses, think tanks and recruitment agencies operating in the sector, through to details of monitoring, polling and research services.

Together with the new PubAffairs Blog, industry news and stakeholder events areas, there is a whole host of information about what’s going on in and around the public affairs and government communications sector.

Notes to Editors

1. PubAffairs is the public affairs, government relations, policy & communications network.
2. Established in January 2002, and free to join, PubAffairs numbers over 2000 members from all the sectors concerned with government affairs, policy, stakeholder relations, corporate communications and lobbying.
3. Members come from all organisations involved in the public policy arena including trade associations, representative bodies, political consultancy, companies, NGOs and charities, think tanks, civil service, Houses of Parliament, local government, recruitment, law firms, political monitoring, the media, students and other public affairs related groups.
4. PubAffairs organises monthly networking events in Westminster every last Thursday of the month. Events are regularly attended by between 100-150 practitioners.
